The rules permitting members of services forming themselves into Associations would appear to need some amplification. The rules prohibit such associations including among its members any persons not actually in the public service but there is no means of checking whether this rule is observed in fact. All such associations may be requested to submit, as soon as an Association is formed and once a quarter thereafter, lists of their members giving particulars of the official position they hold in order to enable Government to verify that this rule is strictly observed.

Send with a draft as ordered.

BA 11/2/21 A quarterly list appears to be a little too frequent. It is for Consideration whether an annual verification will not answer the purpose. Govt may also prescribe that the books of every such Association should be open for the inspection of the Chief Secretary to Govt or other officer authorised by Govt in this behalf
